

HELIUM THE HERO

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

In the Periodic Kingdom, heavy metals clanked and rumbled through the streets. Little Helium, a glowing blue balloon-shaped hero, floated above it all. 'Up here, nothing feels heavy!' Helium giggled. One day, a loud crash echoed. Big, clumsy Iron had tipped over a cart of shiny gears, blocking the whole street! 'Oh no,' said Helium, zooming down. 'Let's fix this together!'

Iron groaned, trying to push the heavy gears. 'They're too heavy for me alone!' he grumbled. Helium floated closer, humming cheerfully. 'I may be light, but I know a trick!' Helium puffed gently under each gear, making them wobble upward like balloons. 'Whoa, they're floating!' Iron laughed in surprise. Together, they guided the gears off the street, clearing the path for everyone to pass.

With the street clear, Iron looked at Helium with wonder. 'You're so small, but so helpful!' he said. Helium smiled. 'Every element has a special power. Mine just happens to be floating!' Suddenly, a gust of wind scattered loose papers everywhere. Helium swirled around, catching each one mid-air. Iron stomped carefully, helping stack them neatly. 'We make a great team,' Iron said happily.

By sunset, the Periodic Kingdom sparkled with order again. Iron patted Helium gently. 'Thanks for showing me that light can be strong too.' Helium twirled joyfully. 'And heavy can be careful and kind!' From that day on, whenever trouble bubbled up in the kingdom, Helium and Iron worked side by side—one floating high, one standing strong—proving every element had its own special kind of heroism.
