

TRAPPED IN THE SCREEN

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

Ethan sat glued to his glowing screen, tapping and swiping, lost in between. Mom called, "Dinner's ready, come eat!" But Ethan stayed still in his cozy seat. "Just one more level," he said with a grin, not hearing Mom's worried voice sink in. Mia peeked in, her homework in hand. "Ethan, please join us, let's make a plan." But Ethan just shrugged, eyes fixed on the light, missing the stars and the soft evening night.

At school the next day, Mr. Reyes saw Ethan yawning, his homework incomplete. “Where’s your assignment?” the teacher asked kind. Ethan looked down, words stuck in his mind. “I was playing games till very late,” he whispered softly, feeling irate. His eyes felt heavy, his grades took a dip. Friends waved hello, but he gave them the slip. Mr. Reyes smiled, “Let’s find a new way to balance your screen with fun and play.”

Just one more more minute !

That evening Mom sat with Ethan so near. "Let's make a schedule, nothing to fear. Screen time at six, then games with the sun, homework comes first, then let the fun run." Mia cheered, "I'll help you stay strong, we'll ride our bikes, and sing a fun song!" Ethan nodded, a smile on his face. "I'll try my best, in this new paced race." Mr. Reyes added, "Small steps bring big gain, balance will help you, through sunshine and rain."

Days passed by, Ethan felt light and free, homework done early, now time to see. He rode his bike with Mia so fast, laughing out loud, having a blast. At dinner he talked, no screen in his hand. Mom smiled proudly, this was the plan. Mr. Reyes said, "Great job, well done, you found the balance, now shine like the sun!" Ethan grinned wide, his heart full of cheer. Technology's a tool, not something to fear.
