

PHOEBE DISCOVERS THE WORLD BEHIND THE SCREEN

Phoebe tapped her tablet, watching videos. "Where does the cloud live?" she wondered. Suddenly, a swirl of light twirled from the screen! A fluffy little sprite made of mist and tiny gears floated before her. "I'm Puff, keeper of wires and sparks," it chimed. "Want to see where your videos really live?" Phoebe grinned and grabbed Puff's tiny hand. Together they zoomed through the screen, ready for a grand adventure to find the real cloud.

Puff led Phoebe to a giant building humming with lights. "This is a data center," Puff explained. "Computers here store your pictures and games." Rows of blinking machines stretched far. "But computers need power," Puff said, pointing to wires sneaking outside. They followed cables to a big power plant. "Electricity keeps everything running!" Phoebe touched a warm wall. "Wow, the cloud isn't fluffy at all," she laughed. "It's made of metal and light!"

Next, Puff zipped Phoebe to a rocky mountain. Workers dug shiny minerals from the ground. "These tiny rocks become computer parts," Puff said. They watched factories shape metal into chips, then ships carried boxes across the sea. Trucks rolled them to stores. "Everything we touch traveled far," Phoebe whispered. But soon, an old broken phone tumbled into a trash pile nearby. "What happens now?" she asked, worried. Puff smiled, "Let's find out together."

Puff showed Phoebe a recycling center buzzing with helpers. Machines sorted glass, metal, and plastic. "Old phones can be fixed, reused, or turned into new things," Puff said. Phoebe watched a broken tablet become shiny parts again. "So nothing truly disappears?" she asked. "Right," said Puff. "Things just change form!" Phoebe smiled, hugging her tablet. "I can help too—by caring for my gadgets!" Puff twinkled proudly as they zoomed back through the screen, both wiser.
