

SPIDERMAN MEETS GOBLIN

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

Spider-Man crouched on a rooftop, eyes wide. Across the night sky, Green Goblin zoomed by on his glider, holding a glowing cyan crystal. "That crystal looks magical!" Spider-Man said. "Better make sure it's safe." He stretched his arms, ready to leap. The city lights twinkled below as he took a breath and swung into the sky, chasing the mysterious glow into the dark.

Spider-Man swung between buildings, webs stretching wide. "Wait up, Goblin!" he called. Green Goblin laughed and tossed pumpkin bombs that puffed orange smoke. "Catch me if you can!" he shouted. Spider-Man dodged each puff, spinning through the air. "I just want to talk!" he yelled. The chase zigzagged past glowing windows, rooftops, and signs, both flying high above the busy, colorful city streets below.

The chase ended at an old stone tower, cracking with blue sparks. Suddenly, the tower shook and Green Goblin's glider spun out of control! "Help!" he cried, tumbling downward. Spider-Man shot a strong web, catching him just in time. "Gotcha!" Spider-Man said, pulling him to safety. Green Goblin sighed with relief. "Thank you," he whispered, holding the crystal tightly against his chest.

Sitting on the rooftop, Green Goblin explained, "I found this crystal and got excited. I didn't mean to cause trouble." Spider-Man smiled. "Next time, ask for help instead of racing off." They both laughed, watching the crystal shimmer between them. "Friends?" asked Green Goblin, holding out his hand. "Friends," Spider-Man agreed, shaking it. Together, they watched the sunrise glow over the peaceful city.
