

BEST FRIENDS FOREVER

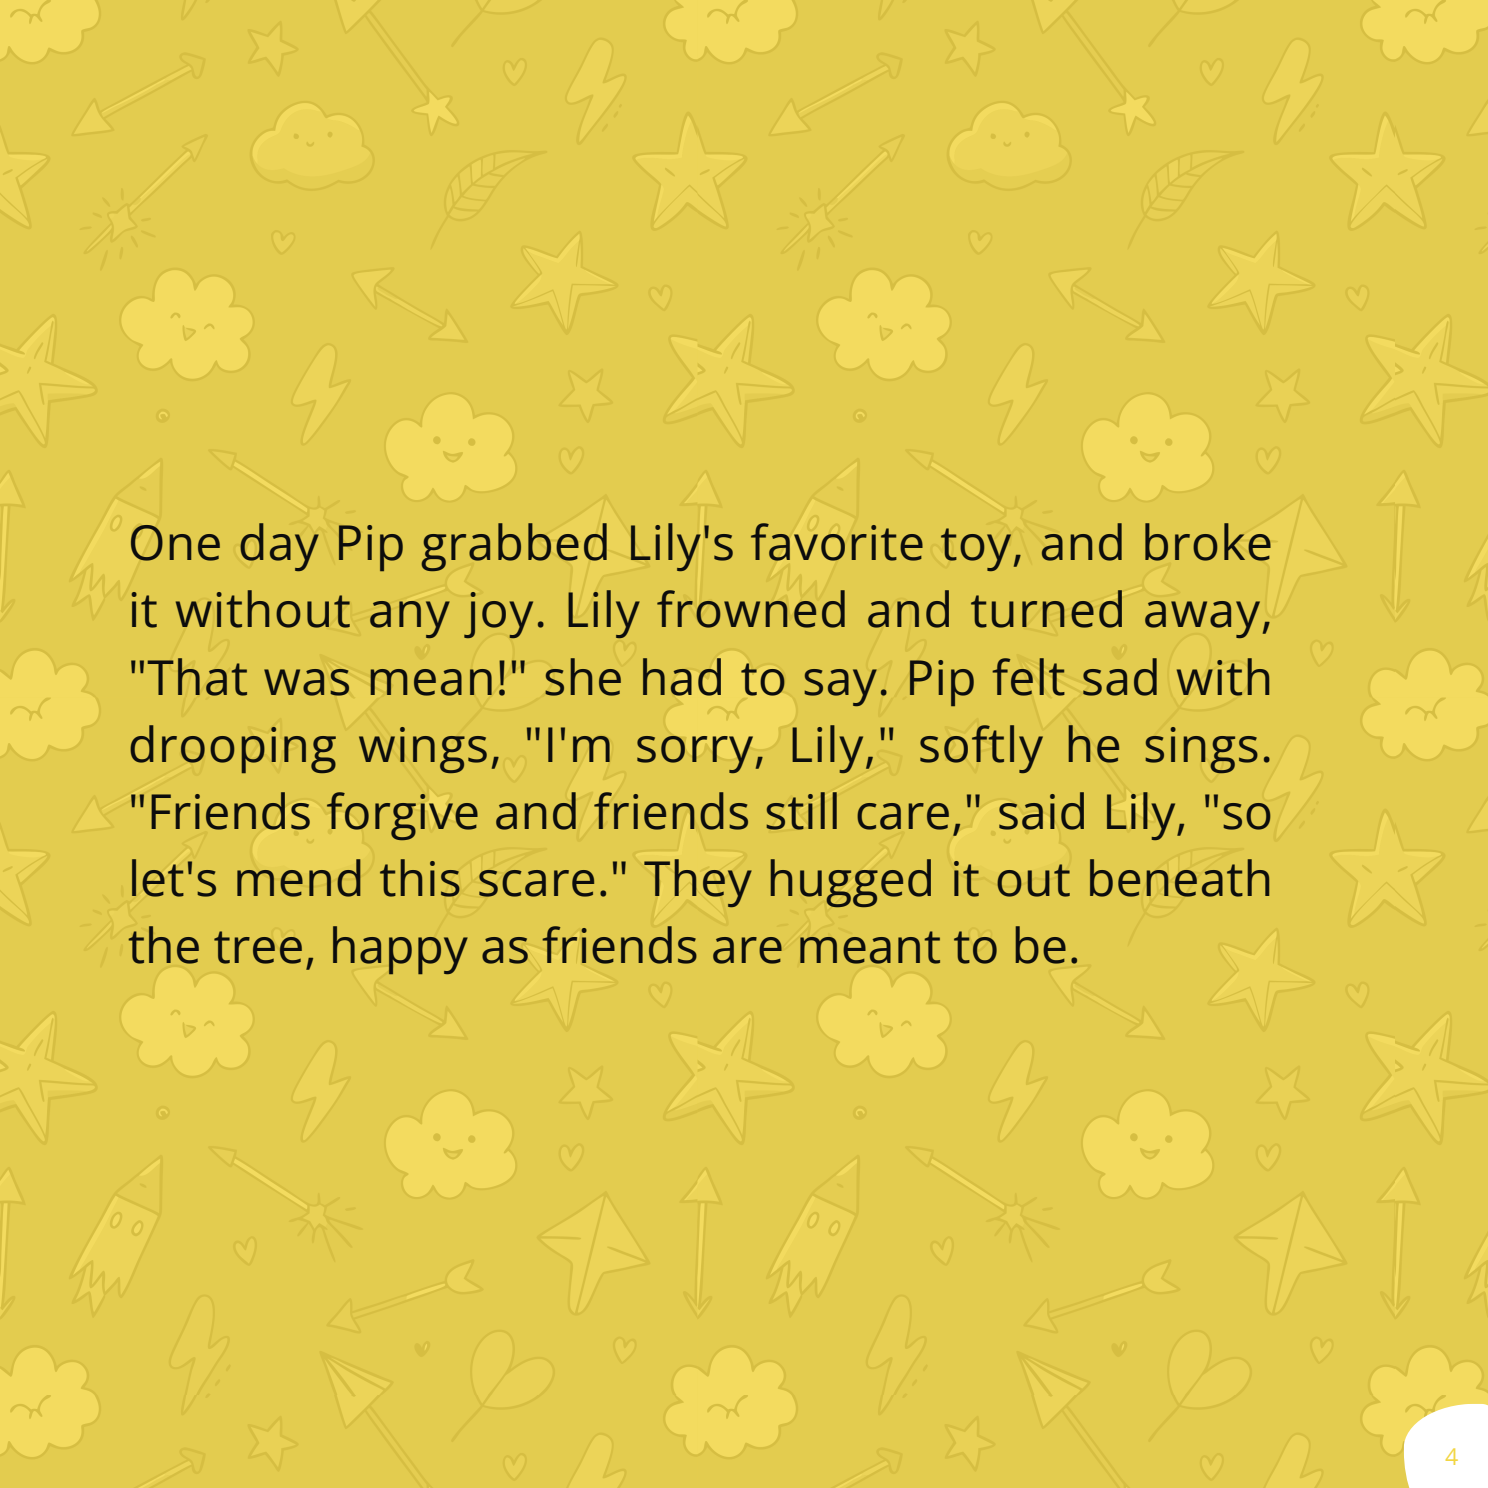

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

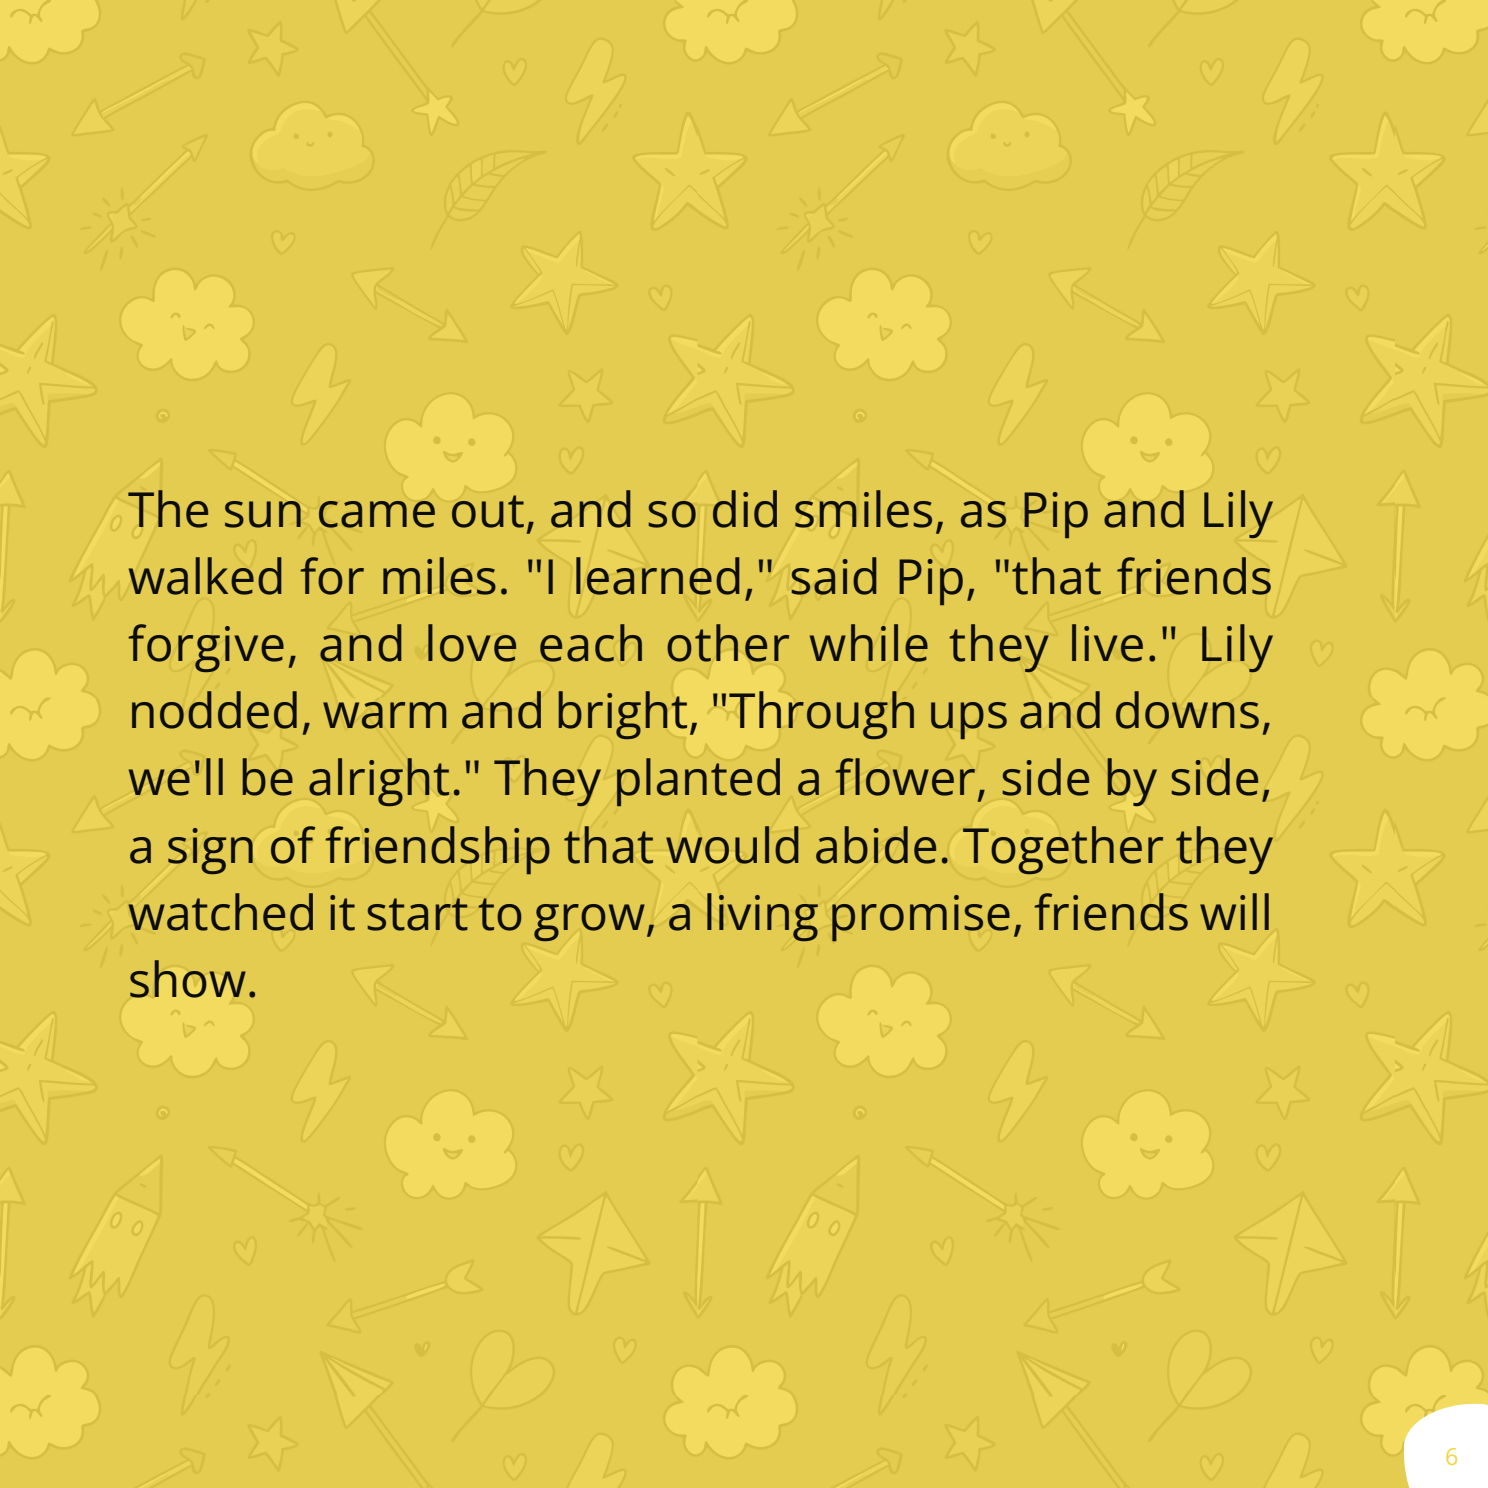

Pip the chick had eyes so blue, and a tiny yellow beak too. One sunny day, he met a girl named Lily, with golden curls so fair. They rolled a ball across the grass, and giggled as the hours passed. "Will you be my friend?" asked Pip with glee. "Forever and ever!" laughed Lily happily. They shook on it, so proud and true, and knew their friendship had just grown new.

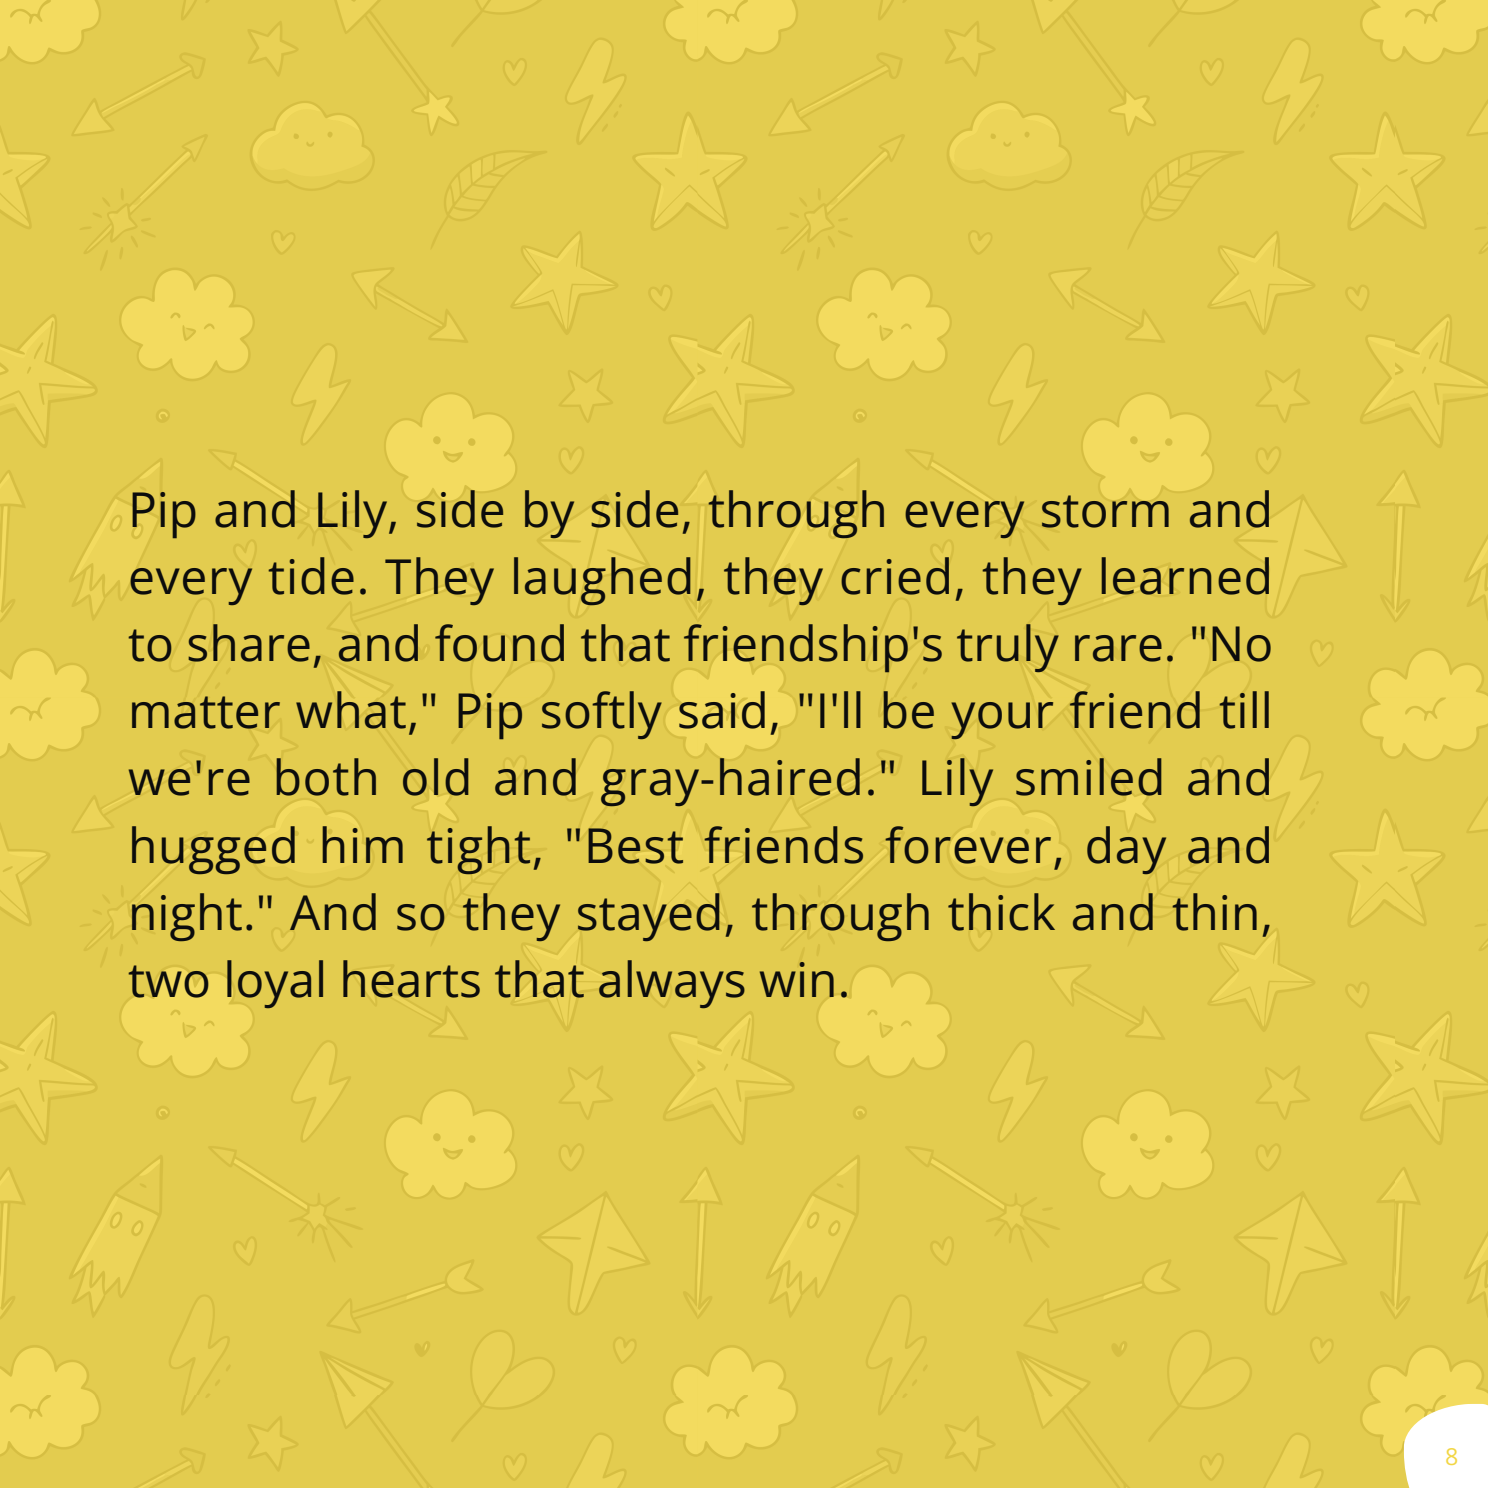

One day Pip grabbed Lily's favorite toy, and broke it without any joy. Lily frowned and turned away, "That was mean!" she had to say. Pip felt sad with drooping wings, "I'm sorry, Lily," softly he sings. "Friends forgive and friends still care," said Lily, "so let's mend this scare." They hugged it out beneath the tree, happy as friends are meant to be.

The sun came out, and so did smiles, as Pip and Lily walked for miles. "I learned," said Pip, "that friends forgive, and love each other while they live." Lily nodded, warm and bright, "Through ups and downs, we'll be alright." They planted a flower, side by side, a sign of friendship that would abide. Together they watched it start to grow, a living promise, friends will show.

Pip and Lily, side by side, through every storm and every tide. They laughed, they cried, they learned to share, and found that friendship's truly rare. "No matter what," Pip softly said, "I'll be your friend till we're both old and gray-haired." Lily smiled and hugged him tight, "Best friends forever, day and night." And so they stayed, through thick and thin, two loyal hearts that always win.
