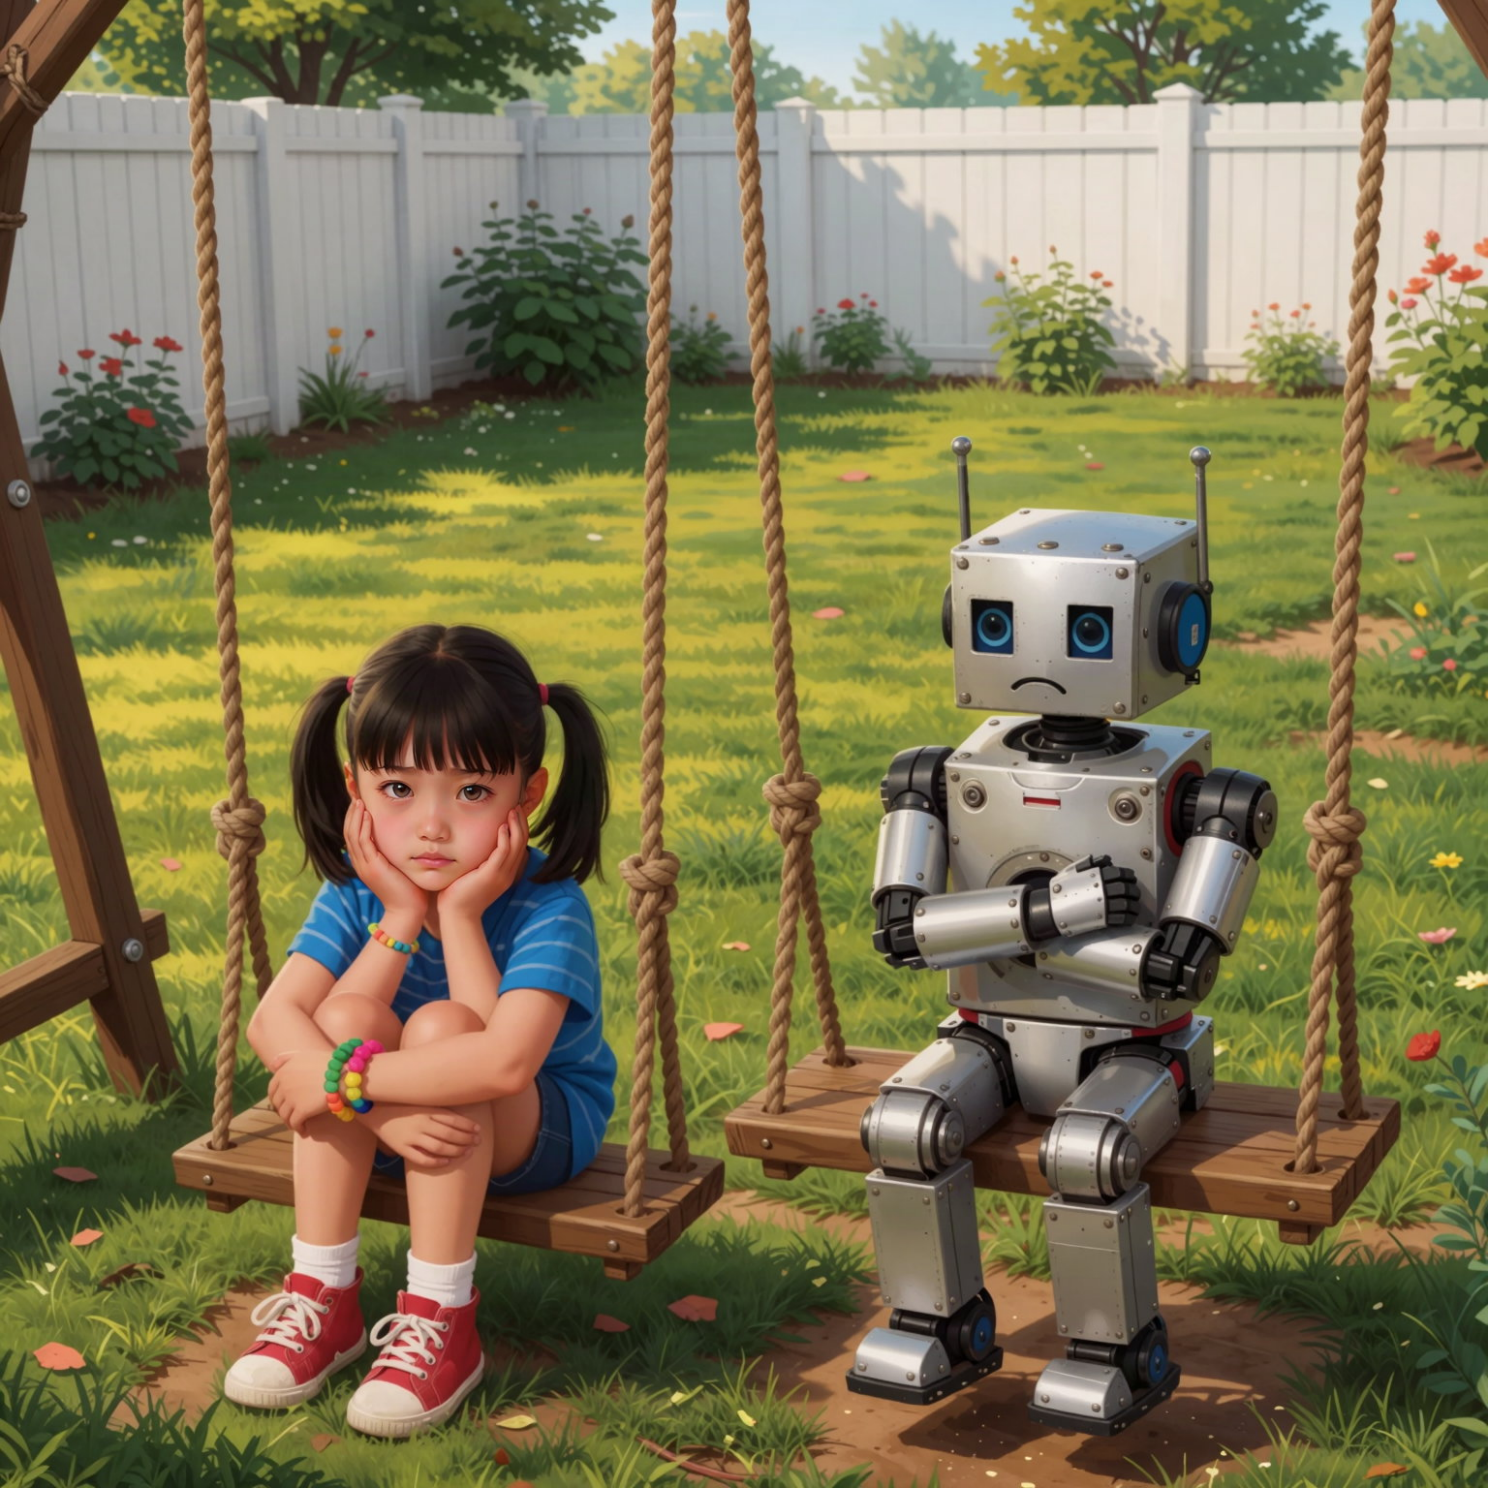
BEST FRIENDS FOREVER

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

Aga and her best friend, Mia, built towers of colorful blocks in the sunny backyard. "Let's make the tallest tower ever!" Aga said, grinning. Mia nodded and carefully stacked another block. The tower wobbled, but they held it steady together, laughing. "We really are a great team," Mia said, smiling. Aga agreed happily. They spent the whole afternoon playing and sharing cookies under the old oak tree, promising to always be friends.

The next day, Aga wanted to play tag, but Mia wanted to draw pictures. "Tag is more fun!" Aga said, crossing her arms. "Drawing is better!" Mia replied, frowning. They both stomped away, feeling grumpy and sad. Aga sat alone on the swing, missing her friend already. Across the yard, Mia hugged her knees, feeling the same way. She realized arguing felt worse than any game they could play together.



Aga walked over to Mia and said, "I'm sorry for being grumpy." Mia smiled and said, "I'm sorry too." "Let's play tag first, then draw pictures together," Aga suggested. Mia agreed happily, and they ran across the yard, laughing. Afterward, they sat together drawing colorful rainbows and silly animals. "Friends can disagree and still love each other," Mia said softly. Aga nodded, feeling grateful for her wonderful friend. They hugged tightly under the warm sun.

That evening, Aga and Mia sat on the porch watching fireflies glow. "Let's always be best friends, no matter what," Aga said. Mia grinned and linked her pinky finger with Aga's. "Best friends forever," she promised. They giggled, feeling happy and safe together. From that day on, whenever they argued, they remembered to say sorry and keep playing. Their friendship grew stronger with every sunny day and silly adventure they shared.
