

CAN WE HAVE ONE MORE TOMORROW?

BY CHILDBOOK.AI

Illustration prompt: A sunny kindergarten playground, a shy boy sitting alone by a sandbox while another boy waves and walks over with a toy truck. Noah sat alone, watching the other kids play. He was too shy to ask anyone to join him. Then Eli walked over with his favorite toy truck. 'Want to play?' he asked with a big smile. Noah nodded, and just like that, two little boys became best friends forever.

Illustration prompt: Two boys blowing out candles together at a birthday party, balloons and cake on the table, both laughing. Every year, Noah and Eli celebrated their birthdays together, blowing out candles side by side. In class, they sat at the same desk, sharing crayons and helping each other with tricky math problems. Whenever Noah forgot his lunch, Eli always shared his sandwich. They were more than friends—they were like brothers who never ran out of things to laugh about.

Illustration prompt: A hospital room with Eli in bed smiling weakly while Noah sits beside him holding a drawing. In fifth grade, Eli started feeling tired all the time. His mom said he was sick and needed special medicine. Noah visited him every week, bringing drawings and silly jokes to make him smile. 'Will you still be my best friend?' Eli asked softly. 'Always,' Noah said, squeezing his hand tightly. 'No matter what happens tomorrow.'

Illustration prompt: Noah sitting under a big tree at school, looking up at the sky with a small smile, sunlight shining through the leaves. In sixth grade, Eli went to heaven, leaving Noah with a heart full of memories. Noah planted a little tree at school where they used to play, whispering, 'I hope we get one more tomorrow together, someday.' Every time the wind rustled the leaves, Noah smiled, feeling like Eli was still right beside him, laughing and playing forever.
