Once upon a time, in a little town,

There lived a girl named Hannah, with a smile like a crown.

She loved to walk outside, feeling so glad,

Her mom said it's called gratitude, a feeling she had.

Every season brought joy, every season brought cheer,

Hannah felt gratitude throughout the year.

In summer, flowers bloomed, so colorful and bright,

They made her smile, from morning till night.

When fall arrived, leaves fell from the trees,

Orange, yellow, and red, dancing in the breeze.

Hannah played in the leaves, oh what a delight,

Jumping and laughing, from morning till night.

Winter came with snow, so pure and so white,

Covering the ground, like a blanket of light.

Hannah saw the snowflakes, sparkling with glee,

She built a snowman, as happy as can be.

Springtime arrived, with colors anew,

Hannah felt excitement, as the flowers grew.

Puddles to jump in, and rainbows in the sky,

She danced with joy, as the days went by.

In every season, Hannah loved to play,

With her friends, having fun every day.

They laughed and they ran, in the sun and the rain,

Grateful for the moments, they would always remain.

Hannah was grateful, for every season's grace,

For the beauty they brought, to every place.

Summer, fall, winter, spring,

Gratitude in her heart, made her heart sing.

And so, the story of gratitude ends,

With Hannah and her thankful friends.

They cherished each season, with love and delight,

Grateful for the world, shining so bright.
