One sunny morning, Makisig, a little Filipino boy, called out to his best friend, Ligaya, a gentle water buffalo. "Come on, Ligaya! Let's go explore the forest today!" Makisig exclaimed with excitement. Ligaya, with her kind eyes, nodded in agreement. They set off on their adventure, ready to discover new wonders in the lush green forest.

As they strolled through the swaying rice fields, Makisig turned to Ligaya and said, "You're my best friend, Ligaya." Ligaya let out a contented snort, showing her joy at being by Makisig's side. The bond between the two friends grew stronger with each step they took, filling their hearts with happiness and warmth.

Meanwhile, back at Makisig's home, his dad wore a worried expression as he counted coins on the table. "Son, we're struggling to make ends meet. I'm sorry, but we have to sell Ligaya," Makisig's dad said with a heavy heart. Makisig felt a pang of sadness as he held Ligaya close, refusing to let go of his beloved friend. "No, Tatay! Please, we can't!" Makisig pleaded, his eyes filled with tears.

Makisig and Ligaya set off on one last adventure together, exploring the village and bidding farewell to familiar places. The townspeople watched them fondly, sensing the sorrow in both their eyes. Upon their return, Makisig was surprised to find the townspeople waiting outside his house, each holding a small pouch of coins. Their act of kindness filled Makisig's heart with joy and gratitude, knowing that Ligaya could stay with him, and their friendship would endure.
