Kensie hugged her mom tightly as she stood in front of the big school doors. The school buses were lined up, ready to take children on new adventures. Kensie felt a mix of excitement and nervousness. She waved goodbye to her mom and took a deep breath. Today was her first day of preschool.

As Kensie walked into the playground, she saw children of all races and abilities playing together. She joined a group of kids playing tag and quickly made new friends. Everyone was laughing and having fun. Kensie felt happy to be part of such a friendly group. She knew this was going to be a great day.

In the classroom, Kensie sat at a table with a pencil box of eleven crayons and an alphabet paper in front of her. She carefully colored each letter with her favorite colors. Her teacher walked around, helping everyone with their work. Kensie loved learning new things. She couldn't wait to show her mom what she had learned.

Kensie and a few classmates worked together on a puzzle of ten pieces. They helped each other find the right pieces and cheered when they completed it. The colorful classroom was full of laughter and teamwork. Kensie felt proud of what they had accomplished. She realized that working together made things easier and more fun.

Outside, Kensie and her classmates rode around the playground on tricycles with helmets on their heads. They zoomed around, pretending to be race car drivers. Kensie felt the wind in her hair and laughed with joy. The playground was a place of endless adventures. She loved every moment of it.

Back in the classroom, Kensie and her friends sat at a table, building creatures out of play-doh. They made funny shapes and told stories about their creations. Everyone's imagination was running wild. Kensie loved being creative with her friends. It was amazing what they could come up with together.

During circle time, Kensie and her classmates danced together on the classroom carpet. They sang songs and played musical instruments. The room was filled with music and laughter. Kensie felt so happy and free.

She loved sharing these moments with her new friends.

As the day came to an end, Kensie hugged her two smiley teachers goodbye. She waved to her classmates and promised to see them tomorrow. Kensie felt proud of herself for being brave on her first day. She couldn't wait to tell her mom all about her adventures.

Kensie left school with a big smile on her face, ready for more fun tomorrow.
