Ms. Zo was feeling very nervous. Tomorrow was her first day as a teacher. She had prepared her lessons and packed her bag. But she couldn't stop thinking about what could go wrong. She hoped the students would like her.

The morning came, and Ms. Zo walked into the classroom. The students were chatting and laughing. Ms. Zo took a deep breath and greeted them with a smile. She introduced herself and asked each student to share their name. The room soon filled with friendly voices.

Ms. Zo started the lesson with a fun game. The students were eager to participate and learn. Ms. Zo felt her nerves disappear as she saw their happy faces. They learned about numbers and letters through songs and stories. Everyone was having a great time.

The school day ended, and Ms. Zo felt relieved and happy. The students waved goodbye and said they couldn't wait for tomorrow. Ms. Zo realized she had worried for nothing. She knew she would enjoy teaching and helping her students learn. It was a wonderful first day of school.
