In a tiny village nestled in a green valley, a young girl named Marie-Soleil lived a humble life. She spent her days helping her mother with chores and tending to their garden. Marie-Soleil loved the peacefulness of the valley and the beauty of the flowers. Every evening, she would sit by the window and watch the stars twinkle in the night sky.

One evening, while watching the stars, Marie-Soleil noticed a faint glow emanating from her heart. She felt an overwhelming sense of joy and love. It was GodLight, a special light that filled her with warmth. Marie-Soleil knew this light was meant to be shared with others.

Marie-Soleil decided to create a beautiful lantern to symbolize the special light. She carefully crafted it using colorful paper and ribbons. The lantern glowed brightly, just like the GodLight in her heart. She was excited to share this light with her village.

The first person to receive the lantern was Mrs. Thompson, the elderly neighbor. When Marie-Soleil handed her the lantern, Mrs. Thompson's eyes lit up with gratitude. She felt the warmth of the GodLight and smiled.

'Thank you, Marie-Soleil,' she said, 'this light means so much to me.'

Next, the lantern found its way to Thomas, a shy boy who struggled to make friends. With the GodLight, Thomas felt a newfound confidence. He began to talk to other children and soon formed strong bonds with his peers.

The light had given him the courage he needed.

The lantern continued to spread throughout the village, bringing joy and warmth to everyone it touched. People began to help each other more and share their own kindness. The village started to glow with happiness. Marie-Soleil saw how powerful the GodLight could be.

Marie-Soleil learned that when we share GodLight, we create a chain of love and kindness. The village became a brighter and happier place. Even the smallest acts of goodness had a profound impact. Marie-Soleil felt proud of the difference she had made.

Marie-Soleil understood that the GodLight was a gift meant to be shared. She continued to spread the light, knowing it would make the world a better place. The village thrived with love and kindness. And every night,

Marie-Soleil would watch the stars, feeling the glow of the GodLight in her heart.
