April and May were best friends with a shared dream. They loved making candles together. One sunny afternoon, they decided to turn their hobby into a business. They wanted to sell their candles in a few years. They were excited about their bright idea!

April worked at Sugarland Adventure Playground. She knew she couldn't rely only on candle-making just yet. So, she balanced her time between work and her candle-making passion. She started giving testers to friends and family. Feedback was important to know what people liked.

May was great at jotting down notes in her notebook. Together, they learned about different scents and waxes. They experimented with colors and shapes. Every candle they made was a new adventure. Their skills were growing with each candle.

April and May loved hearing what others thought of their candles. Some loved the lavender scent, while others preferred vanilla. They took every suggestion seriously. It helped them decide what candles to make next. Their friends and family were their biggest supporters.

April set a goal for four years to get everything ready. She wanted to have a stand or even a small shop. May was excited about the future too. They both dreamed of a successful candle business. They knew hard work would make their dreams come true.

April was busy with work and candle-making. She learned to balance her time wisely. May helped her stay organized. They both made sure to have fun while working. Their friendship made everything easier.

One day, they held a small candle party. They invited friends and family to see their creations. Everyone was amazed at the beautiful candles. The feedback was positive and encouraging. April and May felt proud of their hard work.

April and May continued to work on their dream. They knew it would take time, but they were determined. Their candles brought joy to others, and that made them happy. They were excited for the future and what it held. Together, they were unstoppable!
