by childbook.ai

One bright morning, Emperor Akbar sat happily on his grand throne. He looked around at his busy courtiers and had a fun idea. He wanted to see if Birbal could answer a tricky question. With a smile, he decided to test his clever friend. The royal court was excited to see what would happen next.

Emperor Akbar said, 'Birbal, tell me—how many crows are in my kingdom?' The courtiers gasped and whispered among themselves. They all wondered how anyone could count so many crows. Birbal listened carefully and gave a calm smile. Everyone waited eagerly for his response.

Birbal replied, 'Your Majesty, there are many, many crows in your kingdom.' He added, 'If more crows fly in, they must be visiting friends.' And if there were fewer crows, he said, 'Then some might be on a little adventure.' His answer was playful and smart. The courtiers burst into cheerful laughter.

Emperor Akbar clapped his hands with delight at Birbal's funny reply. He said, 'You always make me smile with your clever answers.' The courtiers smiled and clapped too, happy with the fun lesson. Everyone learned that quick thinking and a good heart can solve tricky problems. The royal court ended the day filled with laughter and joy.
