

THE LITTLE STAR AND THE CLOUD

by childbook.ai

Once upon a time, in the vast sky above, there was a tiny star named Luma. She twinkled brightly every night, but deep inside, she felt lonely. The other stars were far away, and she longed for a friend to talk to. One evening, as the sun set, a fluffy white cloud named Puffy floated by.

"Hello, little star!" said Puffy cheerfully. "Hello, Cloud," Luma replied shyly. "Will you be my friend?" Puffy smiled. "Of course! But I move with the wind. What if I drift away?" Luma twinkled brighter. "True friends are always connected, no matter how far apart they are!"

Every night, Puffy would visit Luma, and they would share stories. Luma told tales of the sparkling galaxies, and Puffy spoke about the lands he had seen below—the green forests, blue oceans, and golden deserts. One night, a strong wind blew, carrying Puffy far across the sky. Luma waited, hoping Puffy would return. Days passed, and she felt sad and lonely again.

Then, one evening, as the stars began to shine, a familiar voice called, "Luma, I'm back!" Puffy had returned! Though the wind had taken him far away, he never forgot his friend. From that day on, Luma and Puffy knew that no matter where they were, their friendship would always shine as brightly as the stars in the sky. Moral of the story: True friendship stays strong, even when friends are far apart.
