

THE BOY WHO FOUND A PULLEY

by childbook.ai

Zane huffed as he tried to drag a heavy water bucket up the hill. Bingo dashed around him, wagging his tail. "This is too hard!" Zane sighed. Bingo barked, as if he agreed. Both looked out at the big water tank down the hill. Zane wondered, "Is there an easier way?"

Zane noticed the clothesline rope moving around a round wheel. "It spins and pulls the clothes," he said, thinking hard. Bingo tilted his head, curious. Zane's eyes lit up. "Maybe I can do the same!" he shouted. Bingo barked happily.

Zane searched for a spool, rope, and a bottle. He tied the rope to the bottle and set the spool on a sturdy stick. "Ready, Bingo?" Zane smiled. He dropped the bottle down towards the tank and filled it with water. Slowly, he pulled the rope. The bottle rose up easily!

Zane grinned as the water bottle reached him at the top. "This is so much easier!" he cheered. Bingo wagged his tail and bounced around Zane. Zane used the pulley every day after that. Watering the plants became fun. Bingo always watched, proud of his friend's idea.
