During the relay race, David passed the baton to Hannah. She stumbled but kept running with Sam cheering, "You can do it!" Hannah finished strong, and the team hugged. "It’s okay to trip, as long as we support each other," said Sam. David nodded, grinning. Their teamwork made them feel like winners.

Sam splashed water by accident during swimming practice. "Sorry, David!" Sam apologized. David smiled, "No problem." Hannah said, "It's nice when we're honest and forgive each other." Everyone enjoyed swimming together. They laughed, knowing kindness made practice better.

David accidentally knocked over the board game. Hannah gasped, but Sam quickly said, "It’s okay, mistakes happen." David helped fix the pieces and they restarted. "Thanks for understanding," he said gratefully. They all agreed having fun was more important. The laughter returned to the room.

One day, David lost his temper during basketball and yelled. Sam and Hannah felt upset and quiet. David saw their faces and regretted it. "I’m sorry for shouting," he admitted. They forgave him, reminding each other to stay calm. The game turned fun again.

"If we’re not kind, no one enjoys playing," said Hannah. Sam added, "It can cause arguments and make people sad." David nodded, "I want us to always have fun together." They promised to treat each other with respect. Working together made everything better. Smiles returned to the group.

Sam said, "Let’s remember sportsmanship at school and outside." Hannah agreed, "It’s important everywhere, not just in games." David grinned, "We can show respect every day." They laughed, heading out to play. Their friendship grew even stronger. Everywhere they went, they spread kindness.
